Catherine Hanaway: A Proven Leader for Missouri

Catherine Hanaway

When Catherine Hanaway was first elected to the Missouri House of Representatives in 1998, she was a freshman lawmaker in a body dominated by Democrats. By the time she left the House in 2004, she had become its first female Speaker, having built the first Republican majority in half a century. During this time, she defeated Democrat Governor Bob Holden's efforts to raise taxes on hard-working Missourians, crafted new, innovative economic development tools (one of which was instrumental in the creation of the Kanas City Power & Light District), fought for tort reform, passed Missouri's first concealed carry law, and successfully reformed Missouri's child protective services, adoption and foster care programs.

Catherine Hanaway is a proven leader with the values and experience to clean up Jefferson City and get Missouri moving again.

After her time in the House, President George W. Bush appointed her U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of Missouri. In this role as the chief federal prosecutor for half the state, she oversaw the prosecution of thousands of criminals, including corrupt public officials, major drug dealers, and child predators. Since then, in the private sector, she has built a successful law practice, helping Missouri businesses solve complex legal problems and fight overzealous government regulators.

A mother-of-two who grew up in rural Nebraska and Iowa, Catherine Hanaway is a proven leader with the values and experience to clean up Jefferson City and get Missouri moving again.

Missouri's Chance to Join the Conservative Revolution

Catherine Hanaway

Missouri is a great state, home to hard-working people and tremendous resources. All the tools are here for Missouri to be a dynamic economic engine for the country. Yet, Missouri has lagged behind its peers, failing to recover jobs lost in the Great Recession and showing only anemic economic growth, ranking 43rd in the nation.

With strong leadership, we can get Missouri back on course. Thirty-one Republican Governors around the rest of the country have proven that pro-growth policies make a difference. Catherine Hanaway transformed Missouri once, leading the Republican takeover of the House, and she will do it again. She will lead the Legislature and bring jobs back to Missouri by enacting pro-growth policies like right-to-work and badly-needed tort reform, while improving education, investing in our crumbling infrastructure, and cutting back on oppressive regulation.

Catherine knows that every new regulation is effectively a new tax on productivity. She knows what it takes to corral government and let the private sector do what it does best — put people to work and make people's lives better. That is why she has committed to a freeze of all new regulations on day one of her term as Governor. She will stand up to the federal government to keep energy costs low and farms productive.

Catherine will unleash Missouri's greatness by working with leaders from every community to solve Missouri's toughest problems. She is committed to making Missouri the number one agri-business state in the country and supporting the entrepreneurs and workers who will get Missouri moving again.

The 2016 election is Missouri's chance to join its peer states in electing strong Republican leadership.
